US Sanctions Bosnians for “Destabilizing Action”

In an unusual move, Treasury today sanctioned two officials from Bosnia and Herzegovina for “destabilizing behavior.” The order cites various actions related to efforts to reawaken conflicts from the 1990s, noting for example that the sanctioned individuals refused to nominate judges to fill court vacancies and changes in jurisdiction designed, the U.S. asserts, to undermine what the 1995 Dayton Agreement advocated for. While it is not unprecedented for the U.S. to use sanctions in this fashion, it is most uncommon and appears to presage a new Biden Administration approach to using sanctions not only against Russia and Kleptocracy, but also problematic state actors beyond high-profile situations such as that in China related to Hong Kong.
